

The Power of a Plan

Did you know that planning your future
now can help secure the future of your family,
friends and the causes
important to you forever?

Planning for Your Future is Easier Than You Think

Many believe planning for the future is an expensive, long process, but often this assumption is inaccurate. Creating a plan is less about form and procedure and more about considering all the people and causes that are important to you. The reality is more like this:

- Many assets can be transferred outside of your will.
- A well-written will can be a couple of pages long.
- If you do not create a plan, the state will create a plan for you, and that plan may not match your goals.

Recent studies show that nearly half of all Americans have not prepared a will.

What Happens if You Fail to Plan

Failing to plan can mean accidentally disinherit those you love. Here are a few things to consider that will enable you to provide for the people and causes you care about most:

- A will gives you the ability to direct how you want your assets distributed.
- A living trust avoids probate and gives you flexibility now and after you pass away.
- Life insurance, joint accounts and trusts pass assets outside of probate. With proper planning, these assets can go to your beneficiaries automatically.

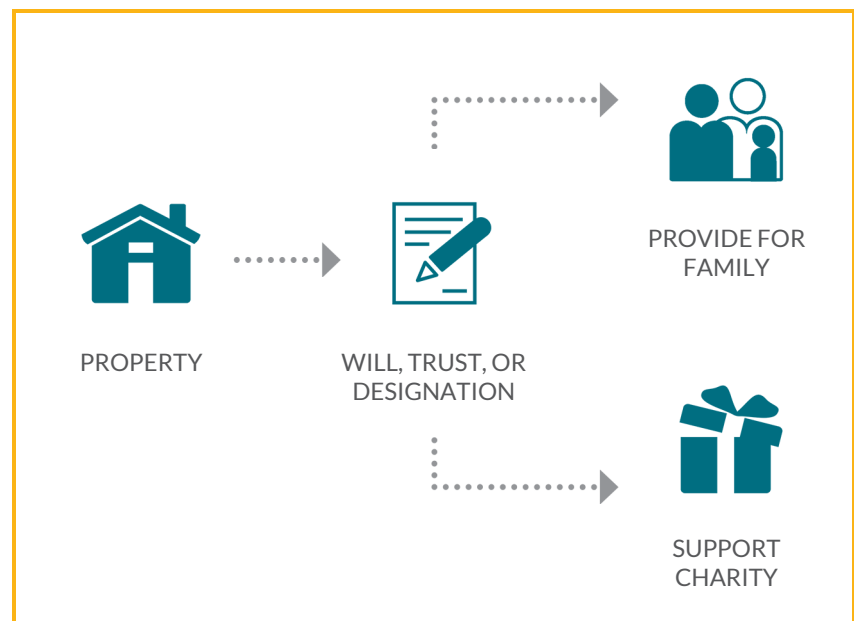

The Benefits of Creating Your Plan

In addition to unparalleled peace of mind, creating your plan provides advantages that begin now and continue forever. Here are some of the many ways a plan can benefit you and your loved ones:

- You can avoid or limit taxes for your heirs.
- You can include healthcare and end-of-life instructions so even if you cannot speak for yourself, others will clearly know your wishes.
- You can appoint a guardian to care for your minor children.
- You can live every day knowing you have not left your life's work to chance. You will know the good works you do today will continue tomorrow.
